

27. The structure of the major product formed in the following reaction

Aryl halides are generally inactive to nucleophilic substitution due to partial double bond character and many other factors. Thus nucleophilic substitution occurs at the primary alkyl halide which is far more reactive than haloarene.